GLOBALTEC LAUNCHES SUBSCRIPTION TREND RECOGNITION TOOL FOR TRADERS OF COMMODITIES AND FUTURES

(DALLAS—November 16, 2006)—With the electronic trading revolution leveling the playing field in the world’s largest diversified marketplace—commodities and futures—GlobalTec, a leading producer of trend-recognition software for the individual investor, is launching Commodity Explorer™. This trading platform and research tool, now available on a monthly subscription basis, quickly analyzes more than 25 liquid commodities and futures contracts based on what matters most—supply and demand.

Developed by the makers of Wizetrade, Commodity Explorer is the first product in GlobalTec’s suite of trading software being offered as a subscription. A subscription costs $99, which includes a delayed exchange fee that provides users an inexpensive way to practice trading. When customers are ready to trade for real money, they can place trades directly through the software via integrated broker partners Lind-Waldock or Man Financial. A real-time exchange fee is required to place live trades.

While most software programs use multiple sets of complicated charts and graphs that can be difficult to interpret, Commodity Explorer allows consumers to track the buying and selling pressure for each commodity with red–light, green-light trend indicators.

“The futures markets allow investors to take advantage of the global opportunities that drive the economy: stocks, energies, metals, foods and interest rates,” said Alan Knuckman, President of Commodity Explorer. “Successful trading is about recognizing opportunities in the market and timing your entries and exits accordingly. Commodity Explorer is a powerful, inexpensive tool to help you identify potential market trends, which simplifies trading in the futures markets.”
